of the recent bride who is wise in the clergyman's guesses gets the objectionable word in the very cleverly. She knew that if she said "I do" in a low, pleasant voice, she repeated her part she said: "I do." The young man, who had a sense of humor, but the man of God guessed how she had outwitted and the hitherto old custom of "I do" without a just cause.

one of the most interesting events of the coming week will be the marriage of Mrs. Elizabeth Wymann Young of Louisville, Ky., to Frank Judson of this city. The bride is said to be one of the fairest of the fair daughters of Kentucky and the groom is one of the wealthy young local bachelors.

It is a source of never failing wonder to older people that a youth whose manners and habits at home one would suppose to be of the best, should enter an office where women or girls are employed and his hat to address them. But that one wearing a high school cap should do so is doubly strange to those who know to what manners these boys are accustomed.

Today and yesterday are given up to the qualifying games in the fall golf tournament. At the Country club, both the men and women trying to "make good" for the finals before tomorrow evening. The rest of the month will finish the game practically for the season as the club will close a month earlier than usual, the restaurant being open only till Nov. 1.

This custom of wearing a young couple out with foolishness because they have "passed the day" is getting rather tiresome to gentle people, and it is becoming the real cause for elements and such marriages. Recently a groom-to-be was awakened at 3 o'clock in the morning of his wedding day and through such a course of fear of the most barbarous judges would subject their uninitiated to.

There is one of the leading bachelors who has decided that the solitary life is not the life for him, and he will tell an interested public all about it in a few days. Incidentally there is a maid who has come to the decision, but—well, she has not mentioned the desire to tell the public about it at all.
